The University of Tennessee College of Veterinary Medicine March 30, 2006

New program in Small Animal Teaching Hospital at the University of Tennessee's College of Veterinary Medicine. Beginning this summer semester, we are offering a one year rotating internship for graduate veterinary technicians. The interns will rotate through core rotations in small animal hospital, interacting with our veterinary technicians, the veterinary students, as well as our clinical faculty and house officers (interns and residents). There will be extra time planned for electives, as well. The veterinary technician interns will receive a monthly stipend ($500.00); have housing provided, as well as medical insurance benefits. Built into the internship are a week of vacation and a week off during the winter break. At the completion of the internship, the veterinary technician will receive a certificate.

We are accepting a maximum of four veterinary technicians for the internship. Interested candidates are required to send the application, college transcripts, a letter telling us why he or she is interested in the internship, and a minimum of two letters of recommendation. The internship will begin as soon after the technician's graduation as possible, recognizing that different programs graduate on different dates. We would hope to have our first class of interns in place on, or before June 1, 2006.

This is an exciting opportunity for those new graduates who are interested in spending an extra year in an educational environment.
